Rheumatoid arthritis is the most common chronic inflammatory rheumatic disease, affecting women more often than men. It is believed that the immunologically mediated response against arthritogenic autoantigens, which occurs in rheumatoid arthritis, is also responsible for the higher incidence of the disease in women. Differences in the activities of several hormone-regulated enzymes and their possible effect on the course of rheumatoid arthritis have been found between men and women. In an ecological study of meteorological and demographic data as well as of industrial and socioeconomic indices from Amsterdam, the Netherlands, we examined the relationship between the incidence of rheumatoid arthritis and the parameters of air pollution, the socioeconomic position of the province, the number of doctors and the number of gynecologists. In order to test the hypothesis that climatic factors may influence the incidence of rheumatoid arthritis, we studied data for the years 1975 to 1989 only, using the time series technique. The rheumatoid arthritis incidence rate was positively related to the number of gynecologists in the province, but negatively associated with the number of doctors
