It can also scan your hard disk or CD/DVD, and search for deleted files to recover them. Supports FAT and NTFS file systems. Create, backup, and manage Windows image files and NTFS partitions: it can create, backup, and manage system image files. It can be saved to the Internet or any other media such as CD/DVD, floppy disk, memory card, etc. and can be burnt to a new disk or USB flash drive. Create and mount any image file: it can create and mount any image file, and all image files on the system can be listed by Digesk File Recovery automatically. Advanced file and folder comparison tool: it can recover and compare the files of any two folders to compare their file contents and structure. And many other advanced features. Installation and preview Despite its lightweight package, Digesk File Recovery requires a full install and creates registry entries on your system. The interface is easy to understand as the controls visibility is increased. Functionality and usage This application has five main uses displayed as buttons above the preview window. "Create Image" helps you create and select the output location for the disk image. You should first consider the available free space on your drive as the disk image won't be created if there is not enough free space. Regarding writing disk images there is the "Write image" button. This one will help you write an image on CD/DVD or USB flash drive. Be careful when you write images as you can lose the existent data from your storing environments. Recover deleted files "Find file" will scan for any file you have noted down in the search field. Simply select your drive, input your file name and hit OK. If the files exist, it will be displayed in the preview tab. This function will also find deleted files but keep in mind that the FAT system overwrites the first letter of a file after deletion. To recover deleted file use the "Recover file" button. Your hard-drive will be

An International Organisation for Migration (IOM) assessment conducted in November found that a "culture of impunity" has allowed militia groups to kidnap migrants and smugglers to extort money. "The insecurity and violence, as well as being exposed to the elements, makes it all the more dangerous", said Mr Mark Malloch Brown, the head of the IOM, speaking to the Observer at the launch of a report on IOM's work in Libya. The organisation found that migrants face "extreme and systematic forced labour" in Libya's vast smuggling networks. During the IOM's field trip, staff encountered a migrant group in Bani Walid who were forced to work on the local road, which is being repaved with taxpayer money. The money is being used to "harvest stones" for the project, said Mr Malloch Brown, adding that "last month they told us they were paying £200 per person for 30 hours of work". The report, entitled Libya: Migrants' access to livelihood opportunities, said that children as young as 13 are trafficked across the country to work in the south. "We met a group of 18- to 20-year-olds who had recently arrived from Egypt, Syria, Jordan, Yemen and Nigeria, who were subjected to deadly violence and extortion at the hands of smugglers", Mr Malloch Brown said. "The threat of kidnapping or force marches them off on dangerous and often life-threatening journeys, if they don't pay up", he said. "Seventy-seven per cent of respondents surveyed said they knew of someone who had been kidnapped by smugglers after trying to cross the Mediterranean and 33 per cent said smugglers
